

Trauma-Informed Strategies for Working with Voices

With Caroline Mazel-Carlton and Marty Hadge

Wednesday, August 15, 9:30am to 12:30pm @ Mount Holyoke College, 316 Reese Psychology & Education Building, South Hadley

An estimated 8 million Americans will hear voices at some point during their adult lives (rates are higher in children). Most of them are trauma survivors. However, few trauma trainings offer concrete, culturally competent strategies for supporting people to navigate the voice-hearing experience. This workshop will provide demonstrations of Voice Mapping, Voice Dialogue and other techniques that acknowledge the context of voices and can create a greater sense of empowerment for voice hearers.

Caroline & Marty are internationally recognized trainers on the topics of hearing voices, alternatives to suicide, trauma, and more. Marty offered a keynote at the World Hearing Voices Congress in 2017 in Boston, and Caroline will be offering a keynote at the 2018 Congress in the Netherlands in September. Together, they speak from first-hand experience of hearing voices and many years between them of supporting other voice hearers and helping providers to build understanding and learn more effective approaches than what is commonly offered in clinical settings.

Please note: Portions of this training will be filmed for an upcoming Hearing Voices documentary.

This training has been made possible through the Hearing Voices Research & Development fund of the Foundation for Excellence in Mental Healthcare in collaboration with Mount Holyoke College & the Western Mass RLC
